CEO OF INNOLOG
APPOINTED TO THE UNIVERSITY OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA'S BOARD OF TRUSTEES

(McLean, VA) - Mr. Verle B. Hammond, President, CEO and founder of Innovative Logistics Techniques, was sworn into the governing board of the University of the District of Columbia (UDC) on January 17, 2006 along with Mr. Gerald B. Lang and Major General (retired) Leo V. Williams, III. Mr. Hammond was selected for the UDC board after a lengthy "interviewing process" that culminated with a public roundtable discussion before the D.C. city council on October 21, 2005. Mr. Hammond spoke to the council about his background, having graduated from an HBCU, and his distinguished military career. He also shared the keys to his success as a businessman and leader. Upon hearing of his confirmation as one of the newest members of the UDC Board of Trustees, Mr. Hammond said, "I am delighted to receive this appointment, and I look forward to providing significant value in working together to make UDC an educational institution of which we can all be proud." Board Chairman Dyke commended Mayor Anthony B. Williams for "providing strong appointments" to the University's Board of Trustees, and expressed the appreciation of the Board to Councilmember Kathy Patterson, Chair of the District Council's Committee on Education, Libraries, and Recreation for expediting the confirmation process for these new Board members.
